PROGRAM OUTCOMES

ABSTRACT

The main objective is to develop a simple overcrowd detection system to count the number of people by using OpenCV. This is mainly used to ensure safety of people under all circumstances. The rapid growth of the world population has resulted in massive audiences at public events including sports, music festivals, religious meetings, and political campaigns, etc. Tragically, stampedes occur every year killing, disappearing, and injuring countless people. As a result, crowd recognition, counting, monitoring, and control are issues that are addressed in order to reduce casualties and avoid such disasters. The project provides a comprehensive overview of technology and techniques related to crowd counting, crowd recognition, image processing, safety monitoring and automated crowd detection. Image captured is processed for crowd counting and results are provided using Django, a high-level Python web framework where alarm rings if the crowd counting exceeds the stated limit.

The existing systems for crowd detection and counting often rely on manual methods or static cameras. Manual methods involve physically counting individuals in a crowd, which is time-consuming, labour-intensive, and prone to errors. Static camera systems use fixed cameras to capture video footage, which is then processed offline to count the number of people. Aims to overcome the limitations of existing systems by providing an automated, accurate, and scalable solution for crowd counting.

In the proposed system, collected crowd image dataset is pre-processed as the first step by performing tasks like noise reduction, image stabilization, resizing without changing the pixel size, and background subtraction. The system is to detect people by using pre-trained models like Haar cascade classifier, deep learning-based approaches like YOLO (You Only Look Once) and traditional methods like contour detection combined with bounding box analysis. The centroid tracking algorithm is used for people counting. The YOLO algorithm used creates bounding box that surrounds the human detected and assigns unique IDs.

ABSTRACT

Cybersecurity in the context of DDoS (Distributed Denial of Service) attacks focuses on defending digital assets from overwhelming volumes of traffic aimed at disrupting services or networks. DDoS attacks involve multiple compromised devices, often organized into botnets, flooding a target with traffic, rendering it inaccessible to legitimate users. Effective cybersecurity against DDoS entails deploying technologies like firewalls, intrusion detection systems, and traffic filtering mechanisms to identify and mitigate malicious traffic. Additionally, proactive measures such as bandwidth management, anomaly detection, and incident response planning are crucial for mitigating the impact of DDoS attacks and ensuring uninterrupted service availability.

The DDOS attack is the major issue in electronic commerce web applications. Implementing a self-recovery architecture using DPC (Dynamic Path Computation) can enhance resilience against such attacks. By integrating DPC into their cybersecurity infrastructure, organizations can automate the process of identifying and responding to DDoS attacks, minimizing downtime and maintaining operational continuity. This proactive approach strengthens the overall resilience of the network, reducing the risk posed by DDoS threats and enhancing the organization's ability to withstand cyber attacks.

The proposed system can be implemented with E-Commerce; Online Trading and other web services. That web services are isolate and protect legitimate traffic from huge volumes of DDoS traffic when an attack occurs.

ABSTRACT

Due to the impact of road-usage, vehicle overload, road construction, and bad weather, there are lots of roads in bad conditions in many large- and medium-sized cities. The consequences of road damages include reduced driving speed, decreased load capacity, increased fuel consumption, and compromised traffic safety and environmental protection. Regular maintenance and repair activities are necessary to maintain a good working condition on the pavement. This project introduces an innovative approach to infrastructure maintenance, focusing on timely detection and repair of road damage for enhanced road safety and traffic flow. Employing a multistage system, high-resolution cameras strategically placed on roadways facilitate realtime data collection.

The core of the proposed solution lies in deep learning model training, specifically Convolutional Neural Networks, for accurate identification of road damage. Real-time video analysis using computer vision techniques ensures immediate detection of damage instances in live feeds. The system generates automatic alerts with detailed information on identified damage, transmitting them to a government portal. This portal enables authorities to access and assess real- time damage data, facilitating efficient maintenance prioritization and assignment based on severity and location. By proactively addressing road damage incidents, this comprehensive system aims to revolutionize the way road maintenance is approached, ultimately contributing to safer and more efficiently managed roadways.

ABSTRACT

In the contemporary digital landscape, where social media is a pervasive force, the prevalence of toxic comments and cyberbullying poses a substantial threat to the quality of online interactions. This project aims to mitigate this issue by employing advanced Natural Language Processing (NLP) and Machine Learning (ML) techniques to develop a real-time Toxic Comment Detection system. The system's core objective is to automatically identify and flag toxic comments, encompassing hate speech, harassment and offensive content. By doing so, it facilitates timely intervention by notifying moderators, enabling them to take appropriate action, and potentially removing harmful content. This initiative seeks to create a healthier online environment, fostering positive user experiences and promoting responsible digital discourse in the face of escalating challenges associated with the darker aspects of online communication.

Moreover, the Toxic Comment Detection system is designed to be adaptable, scalable, and capable of evolving alongside the ever-changing landscape of online communication. By continuously analyzing and learning from new data, the system can refine its algorithms and detection capabilities, ensuring that it remains effective in identifying emerging forms of toxic behavior. Additionally, its scalability allows it to be implemented across a wide range of online platforms, from social media networks to community forums and beyond, thereby extending its reach and impact to a broader audience.

At its core, this project is driven by a commitment to fostering a healthier online environment characterized by respectful and responsible digital discourse. By providing tools and technologies that enable proactive intervention against toxic behavior, we aim to create a space where users feel safe and empowered to engage in meaningful interactions without fear of harassment or abuse. Ultimately, our goal is to contribute to the cultivation of a more inclusive and positive online ecosystem, where individuals from all walks of life can participate freely and without inhibition. Through the fusion of cutting-edge technology and a dedication to promoting digital civility, we believe that meaningful progress can be made in addressing the darker aspects of online communication and building a better, more compassionate digital world for generations to come.

ABSTRACT

In the contemporary era of burgeoning road accidents attributed to driver drowsiness and distraction, the imperative to develop advanced safety measures has never been more pronounced. This project endeavors to introduce a pioneering solution, harnessing the power of OpenCV and image processing techniques to monitor a driver's facial and eye movements in real-time. By meticulously analyzing crucial parameters such as blink rate and head pose, the system can promptly identify signs of drowsiness or distraction, triggering audible alerts and notifying relevant authorities. This multifaceted approach aims to significantly enhance road safety, mitigate the risk of accidents, and revolutionize the landscape of driver monitoring systems. This project implements a new experimental model is designed for detecting drowsiness of driver with buzzer sound to make driver active and to reduce accidents caused. First Driver face is captured and eye retina detection and facial feature extraction are done and blinking values are calculated then threshold values are set. Secondly, the Aurdino module is used which is integrated with suction pump ,buzzer and GPS sensors for real-time calculation of driver location and sent through GSM module. This model uses image processing techniques which mainly focuses on face and eyes of the driver. The model extract the drivers face and predicts the blinking of eye from eye region. Therefore CNN and Haar cascade algorithm are used to track and analyze drivers face and eyes to measure Parclos. If the blinking rate is high then the system alerts the driver with a sound.

PROGRAM OUTCOMES

ABSTRACT

Smart shoe system for the blind is a system made with the help of ultrasonic sensors paired to an Arduino UNO board. all about making physical objects communicate with other objects or even with humans. It is an enabling technology which has a rapid development and growth in the market. In our India there are almost 40 million blind people among which 1.6 million are children. Blind people face great difficulty to travel independently. They have to depend on others in many aspects of their life. The Major problem is when they walk on the road. With a shoe in hand they cannot detect every obstacle that comes in their way. The Smart shoe design provides a long term solution for the blind to walk on roads independently. The smart shoe will help the Blind person to reach his destination independently. in which the shoe will be embedded with various sensors, Microcontroller and buzzers. The shoe warns the user by making noise with the voice that is generated along with the buzzer when he/she walks in front of an obstacle. To improve the efficiency, Smart shoe are designed using water sensors that detects and indicates the water. In this smart shoe the sensors and voice module together communicate and coordinate with each other to ensure that the user does not collide with any obstacle in his way.

ABSTRACT

Traditional traffic signal systems often inadequately accommodate the unique needs of seniors, necessitating a more inclusive approach. Smart traffic signals, leveraging advanced technology and data-driven algorithms, present an opportunity to optimize traffic flow and enhance overall efficiency. This work explores the innovative development of a user-centric smart traffic monitoring signal system aimed at addressing the specific challenges encountered by elderly individuals navigating urban spaces.

System diverges from conventional approaches by integrating high-resolution cameras and advanced sensors, complemented by intuitive user interfaces tailored explicitly for seniors. Prioritizing simplicity and clarity in design, our objective is to ensure ease of use and accessibility for elderly users, who may not be familiar with complex technological systems. A pivotal aspect of system is the empowerment of elderly individuals to influence signal timings, providing them with a sense of control over their environment. By prioritizing their preferences, aim to enhance their experience and safety while navigating urban environments.

System facilitates the coordination and synchronization of signals along corridors or networks, further optimizing traffic flow and minimizing congestion. This benefits not only the elderly but also enhances the overall efficiency of the transportation network for all users. Creating an Elder Assistance based Traffic Signal system using IoT protocols like MQTT or CoAP can enhance safety for seniors crossing streets. By integrating sensors to detect elderly pedestrians and adjusting signal timings accordingly, it ensures sufficient time for them to cross safely. The system is to showcases theextended Pedestrian Crossing Time traffic signal with longer pedestrian crossing time and auditory Signal in addition to visual signal could be incorporated.

ABSTRACT

The real-time sign language detection system designed to bridge communication gaps between the hearing-impaired and hearing individuals. Employing computer vision and machine learning, the system tracks and interprets sign language gestures captured via webcam or video feed. It begins with hand detection and tracking, extracting critical features essential in sign language communication. Leveraging a convolutional neural network (CNN), the model is trained on an extensive dataset of sign language gestures, enabling accurate classification of various signs. The system's implementation prioritizes speed and efficiency for prompt recognition and interpretation of gestures, providing either textual representations or synthesized speech output. Evaluation metrics encompass accuracy, real-time processing, and adaptability to diverse environments.

The existing system of sign language detection incorporates a combination of computer vision and machine learning techniques to interpret and translate signed gestures into meaningful text or speech. Utilizing cameras or sensors, these systems capture the movements and positions of hands, facial expressions, and body language to recognize and interpret the various components of sign language. This project includes expanding the sign language dictionary, concatenation of words and the best learning rate with recorded data training. Ultimately, this system showcases promising capabilities in fostering inclusive communication, offering a foundation for advancing assistive technologies and promoting accessibility for the hearing-impaired in society.

ABSTRACT

The study proposes a comprehensive approach leveraging machine and ensemble learning algorithms to tackle the detection task effectively. Drawing upon the ISCX VPN dataset, encompassing a rich variety of network flows, the project aims to develop a robust detection system capable of discerning between VPN and non-VPN traffic with high accuracy. The methodology encompasses several key stages, including data acquisition, preprocessing, feature extraction, and model training using a suite of Machine and Ensemble Learning algorithms. Decision Tree, Naive Bayes, Random Forest, and Adaboost algorithms are among those slated for evaluation. Through rigorous experimentation and analysis, the most suitable algorithmic approach for accurately classifying encrypted traffic will be identified. By providing a detailed examination of various traffic types and applications within the dataset, this project endeavors to shed light on the intricate nuances of encrypted network communication. The ultimate goal is to develop a framework that empowers network administrators and security analysts to better understand and manage VPN traffic, thereby enhancing overall network security and performance. The anticipated outcomes of this research include insights into the effectiveness of different machine learning algorithms for VPN classification, as well as the identification of potential challenges and areas for future exploration. Ultimately, this study aspires to contribute to the advancement of network security practices by offering practical solutions for the detection of encrypted traffic in real-world settings. The increasing reliance on Virtual Private Networks (VPNs) for secure communication necessitates robust methods for distinguishing between encrypted VPN traffic and other types of encrypted data. This challenge has become more pronounced with the proliferation of remote work and the rising concerns over data privacy and

A spoofing attack occurs when a person tries to masquerade as someone else by falsifying data and thereby gaining illegitimate access.With a special emphasis on face recognition, this study presents a novel two-step face authentication method to solve the changing issues in biometric security. Leveraging the OpenCV framework and incorporating advanced deep learning techniques, the system aims to enhance both the robustness and accuracy of identity verification. The initial step involves real-time face spoofing detection, utilizing a Convolutional Neural Network (CNN) trained specifically for this purpose. OpenCV facilitates seamless access to the webcam, capturing the user's face for analysis. Upon confirming the authenticity of the image, the system progresses to the second stage: face recognition. Here, the user's face is compared against enrolled data in the database, completing the authentication process.

The integration of DenseNet models within the CNN enhances the system's ability to discern between genuine and spoofed images. In instances of detected spoofing, the authentication process is promptly terminated, fortifying the overall security of the face recognition system. This two-step approach addresses the pressing concerns associated with reliability and security in face authentication, presenting a comprehensive solution that combines real-time image capture, sophisticated deep learning algorithms, and a robust database matching mechanism. The proposed system represents a significant advancement in biometric authentication, offering heightened security measures in the face of emerging technological challenges.
